GABY ECLIPSED BY A NEW PARISIAN DANCER

(By ALAN DALE.)
PARIS, France, June 12.—There's a new and grandly gorgeous "girl" in Paris, and, with the fickle Parisians, I succumbed to her fascinations at the Folies Marigny. Her name is Mado-Minty, and she is on the same bill as Gaby Deslys, Regine Flory and other pulchritudinally perfect ones, and makes them all look like 20 cents—just because she can't help it. The odd thing about Mado-Minty is that, in clothes, you do not perceive her beauty immediately. Evidently she knows that—ditto the management—for her first two performances are not clothes incarnated. She rose superior to them, as women have done before her. Mado-Minty is dark, oiled and peculiar as to her face. She wears an odd smile perpetually, with a sort of curled upper lip, that gives her a cynical expression, as though she were saying, "You poor old things, do you suppose I care for you?"

It is her form that is the sensation. Compared with her, the lines of Annette Kellermann are crude, and inartistic. In the review at the Folies Marigny, Mado-Minty appears first as Salome, in a tableau called "The Ceramic Wall of Tanagra," and she wears plenty of jewels. One strip of diamonds across a bare back gives an odd effect. Surrounded by girls in thin terra cotta draperies, Mado-Minty does a Salome dance that doesn't matter a bit, except as a vehicle to display her flexible grace. Never for a moment is there vulgarity or the slightest suggestion in the sinuous movements of the ever smiling Mado. With an ordinary wooden hoop she poses, and peacocks, and prinks! Always with that wily, cynical smile on the curled upper lip.

Of course, Salome has been done to death; one has wearied of her; her charm (if she ever had any) is gone, but the dance gives unique opportunities for beauty that is not merely facial. I suppose that in the United States Mado-Minty would be obliged to respect the sartorial proprieties a little more fully with a few fleshings, etcetera. All that, however, can be arranged later on.

Her next appearance was made as a black Harlequin, in nothing but a thin, tight, black lace suit. This was the "last cry" in oddity. The skintight black lace suit was blocked out in squares, and the effect was most eccentric. Mado-Minty did a regulation Harlequin dance, and was as lively as she had been languorous before. The beauty of her form was still evident; that of her face was less so. Possibly nobody would have looked twice at her features. Yet the dance was compelling and really beautiful. You know—al rumor to the contrary—they will stand for raw vulgarity in Paris. Many flannel-voiced vaudeville women clad from the skin to the heels, are infinitely more vulgar than Mado-Minty in one "thickness" of black lace.

Lastly, she appeared in a yachting costume of white and red—this time tightly clothed! She danced and pirouetted, and did stunts with ears, and—always smiling that tired smile, in which no mirth lurked. Really a strange woman, to whom a picture does no justice.

REBELS HOLD UP CATTLE SHIPMENT

Hunt Seeks Aid of American Consul and Shipment Is Released.

A shipment of 1829 head of Terrazas cattle, belonging to C. B. Hunt, of this city, came near being confiscated by the rebel leaders in Juarez Tuesday afternoon, and it was not until American consul Thomas Edwards had been brought into the case, and it was threatened to turn the cattle over to him, that the rebel leaders allowed the shipment to be exported. The cattle had already been paid for and the war tax of a peso and a half a head on the cattle, together with the freight, had been paid by Mr. Hunt.

The cattle arrived in the city Tuesday afternoon from Gallegos, where they had been loaded. As soon as they came into the city Col. Pascual Orozco ordered that the cattle be held as the war tax had not been paid. Col. Hunt claims that the war tax had been paid earlier in the week while in Chihuahua, and he showed his receipts from the rebel leaders there. Then the rebels said that the tax would have to be paid again, and that the cattle belonged to Terrazas and Hunt had no business in exporting them. Hunt then showed a contract where he had bought 4,000 head from Terrazas and had been guaranteed the safe exportation from Mexico of the cattle. The rebels thought that Hunt was simply the agent of the Terrazas family, instead of being the owner of the cattle.

It was then that the American consul was sought in the case and Hunt notified Col. Pascual Orozco that if he was not allowed to move the cattle on the papers he had, that he would turn them over to the care of consul Edwards. The rebel leader then permitted the exportation to be made, about 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

Mr. Hunt intends to export the remainder of the Terrazas cattle called for in his contract despite the little affair which occurred in Juarez Tuesday. On Thursday 1500 head will be loaded at Gallegos and brought to El Paso. There are still 31,900 head of Terrazas cattle to be moved by the El Paso Livestock and Commission company.

No More Collar Troubles

The latest machine for finishing the popular turn-down collar is now in operation in our plant.

The outer portion of a collar is separated from the band so that a space is moulded between, making a natural and ample tie space, permitting free slippage of the necktie. This is the only method by which collars are turned, without cracking. A trial will convince you that our work is superior. Give us a trial and be convinced.
